

Andrew, who had just been called to the Bar, and who had come to the manse to spend a few days after attaining that distinction, modestly suggested, that considering the various professional points which might be involved in the objects of his father's journey; and considering also the retired life which his father had led in the rural village of Garnock, it might be of importance to have the advantage of legal advice. Mrs. Pringle interrupted this harangue, by saying, we see what you would be at, Andrew; ye're just, wanting to come with us, and on this occasion none for making step-bairns, so well a gang di'pther. The Doctor had been for many years the incumbent of Garnock, which is pleasantly situated between Irvine and Kilwinning, and, on account of Andrew's benevolence of his disposition, was much beloved by his parishioners. Some of the parsonage used indeed to say, in answer to the godly of Kilmarnock, and other admirers of the late great John Russell, of that formerly orthodox town, by whom Dr. Pringle is spowered as a preacher were held in no particular estimation: He kens our pupils frail, and spars to save outlay to the heirs. As for Mrs. Pringle, there is not such another minister's wife, both for economy and management, within the jurisdiction of the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr, and to this fact, the following letter to Miss Mally Glencairn, a maiden lady residing in the Kirkgate of Irvine, a street that has been likened unto the Kingdom of heaven, where there is neither marriage nor giving in marriage. Let her abundantly testify. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
